FRAUD ALERT

WCCU Quarterly Info On Frauds & Scams to be Aware of:
COPYCAT SCAMS:

Pop-up ads on social media for everything from high-end consumer products and fashions to everyday items, they are abundant. The ads promise to deliver exactly what is ordered, usually at unbelievable, rock-bottom prices. The ads are in reality a cattle-call for consumers to be scammed. Once the ad is clicked, the shopper is taken to a website that is anything but what it claims to be, in other words, it's bogus. There are a number of tricks these fraudsters use to cast their webs, including copying an entire legitimate website and its products. Once copied, the site name is altered ever-so-slightly so that most consumers wouldn't notice the difference. In one particular case, the legitimate Mauijim sunglasses site reappeared as Mauijiiim (notice the double "i"), a domain name spelling difference most consumers wouldn't catch, and that's what scammers depend on. This, as well as other online purchase problems include ordering and paying for an item and then receiving a cheap knockoff, an entirely different product, or simply not receiving anything at all. It's no wonder the Better Business Bureau Scam Tracker finds 64% of complaints involved online purchase cons and the FTC reports these scams are the number one fraud in every age group. Other top social media consumer scam complaints involve economic relief and opportunity, as well as romance scams.
